A decidedly mixed bag

Key points

- Headline business confidence (up 6 to net -32%) and firms’ views of their own activity (up 2 to net +9%) lifted in May’s ANZ Business Outlook, but other activity indicators were a mixed bag.

- Pricing intentions and reported cost pressures lifted a touch, but inflation expectations fell to their lowest level since early 2017 (1.8%).

- Residential construction intentions fell sharply again despite the ruling out of a capital gains tax. Employment intentions in the construction sector also fell sharply, to their lowest level since 2009.

In the May ANZ Business Outlook Survey headline business confidence lifted 6 points, with a net 32% of respondents reporting that they expect general business conditions to deteriorate in the year ahead.

Firms’ expectations for their own activity lifted 2 point to a net 9% expecting a lift. Manufacturing is the most optimistic sector; construction is now the least.

Turning to the detail:

- A net 3% of firms are expecting to lift investment, up 1 point.

- Employment intentions fell 4 points to 0. Capacity utilisation rose 1 point.

- Profit expectations rose 3 points to a net 10% expecting profit to decline.

- A net 36% of firms expect it to be tougher to get credit, down 1 point.

- Firms’ pricing intentions lifted 2 points to +29%. A net 50% of firms expect higher costs, led by agriculture. However, inflation expectations fell to 1.81%, the lowest since early 2017.

- Commercial construction intentions fell 12 points and residential fell 7 points to a fresh 10-year low.

- Export intentions fell 2 points.
Most ANZ Business Outlook activity indicators were little changed in May, at levels consistent with the slower growth the economy is experiencing. The main red flag in the survey is residential building intentions. These fell sharply yet again, down another 7 points to a net 27% expecting lower activity, the weakest since 2009. The signal is no longer isolated to this one data series – employment intentions in the construction sector fell from flat to a net 22% of firms intending to cut jobs.

The fall came despite the ruling out of a capital gains tax. What to make of it? New Zealand needs more houses, but the construction sector is facing cash-flow and credit constraints. Despite the small sample, the data has been a pretty good indicator and suggests significant downside risk to the residential investment outlook.

Inflation indicators out of the survey were mixed. Both pricing intentions and reported cost pressures rose slightly, but the fall in inflation expectations from 2.04% to 1.81% took it to the lowest level since early 2017. As figure 3 shows, inflation expectations more often follow inflation than lead it, but expectations entrenched away from the target would present a challenge for monetary policy. The recent fall to just under target may be related to the OCR cut in May and the associated commentary that more stimulus was required to deliver inflation at the 2% target midpoint over the medium term.

The economy has cooled considerably over the past couple of years. The ANZ Light Traffic Index suggests weakness will continue to mid-year. Beyond that, the lower exchange rate and interest rates should see momentum recover, assuming the global outlook and the terms of trade do not deteriorate. But how quickly the economy will bounce back is a key question. If the forward indicators start to suggest that the Reserve Bank’s relatively sharp V-shaped recovery is overly optimistic, it will be game on for further OCR cuts this year.
