Weak NZD partially offsets lower prices

The ANZ World Commodity Price Index fell 2.2% in July, with prices easing across the majority of export sectors. The relatively soft NZD continues to support returns, with the index falling just 0.5% in local currency terms.

Global shipping prices remain elevated, but the volatile Baltic Dry Index did fall a further 16% in July. Prices for moving goods in containers have been relatively stable in the past month. Exporters and importers are still facing delays getting goods in and out of New Zealand as shipping space remains tight and schedules are still regularly disrupted.

Dairy prices fell 2.9% month-on-month (m/m) in July and this trend is expected to continue through August. Global demand for dairy products remains steady, but the ability to continue to pay exceptionally high prices is diminishing as economic conditions tighten across many global markets. NZ exporters are also in a relatively weak selling position at this time of the season as production starts to increase.

The meat and fibre index fell 1.5% in July. Beef prices fell 4.5% m/m as the US domestic supply of beef increased as drought conditions encouraged increased culling of breeding cows. Lamb prices have firmed a little as supply remains curtailed from both New Zealand and Australia. Meat processors in NZ are facing labour shortages, which has reduced throughput and resulted in a backlog of lambs to process.

The horticulture index was the one bright spot, with prices gaining 0.4% in July in world price terms. Apple prices lifted but kiwifruit prices eased a little. The volume of apples and kiwifruit available for export this season has been constrained by labour shortages.

The forestry index fell 2.5% in July, with prices having now eased for three consecutive months. Prices for export logs are now 15% lower than a year ago. Demand from China has softened as the lockdowns resulted in less construction activity than normal. Construction activity normally slows during the summer months in China, and this year is no exception as the hot days take their toll on physical activity.

Aluminium prices dropped 6.6% m/m in July, with prices continuing to trend down since peaking in March. Demand for aluminium is expected to weaken but so too is supply, as high energy costs cut into manufacturers' profit margins. These two market forces will help offset each other, but it is not yet clear if the decrease in supply will be sufficient to stop aluminium prices falling further.
