The next issue of the ANZ-Roy Morgan Consumer Confidence is scheduled for release on 1 April 2022 at 10am.

Darkest before the dawn?

Key points

- Consumer confidence plunged 16 points in February to 81.7, its lowest level since the data began in 2004.
- The proportion of people who believe it is a good time to buy a major household item fell 17 points to -21.
- Inflation expectations were little changed at 5.6%. House price inflation expectations eased from 5.3% to 4.8%.

The ANZ-Roy Morgan Consumer Confidence Index plummeted to a record low in February, as respondents nervously eyed up widespread COVID in the community for the first time.

Turning to the detail:

- Perceptions of current personal financial situations fell 14 points to -18%.
- A net 2% expect to be worse off this time next year, down 12. That's the first time that series has ever been in the red.
- Households think it's a terrible time to buy a major household item (-21, down 17 points). This is the best retail spending indicator in the survey.
- Perceptions regarding the next year's economic outlook fell 21 points to -42%, not as low as when COVID first reached NZ. The five-year outlook fell 11 points to -8%.
- House price inflation expectations eased 0.5%pts to 4.8% unchanged in Auckland but lower everywhere else.
- CPI inflation expectations eased 0.2%pts to 5.6%.

Households' response to whether it was a good time to buy a major household item held up in the South Island but plummeted in the North (figure 2). By age, older demographics held up better (figure 3).

There's a lot of pressure on households, for sure: the rising cost of living, rising interest rates, the cooling housing market, and tighter credit availability. But these things aren't new. Omicron is the big news this month, and it seems to have had an enormous impact across the whole survey.

Interestingly, the Omicron impact had a much smaller effect on consumer confidence in Australia (figure 4), but it possibly came as less of a shock there, insofar as the Delta outbreak was more significant in Australia. In contrast, this is the first time most New Zealanders have faced a significant chance of actually catching COVID-19. This month's data looks grim, but there are undoubtedly some temporary impacts in there. Time will tell what the other side looks like, but we do know that Omicron is fast and furious, and will blow through relatively quickly.

Our confidence composite gauge is a GDP growth indicator created by combining lagged business expectations and intentions with consumer sentiment. Given both the Business Outlook survey and the ANZ-Roy Morgan consumer confidence survey took big hits this week, it's not surprising that the composite has plunged (figure 5).
