Key points

- Consumer confidence eased 2 points in March to 77.7.
- The proportion of people who believe it is a good time to buy a major household item, a key retail indicator, lifted 3 points to -32%, still very low.
- Inflation expectations rose from 5.2% to 5.4%. That's the highest read in nine months. That won't please the RBNZ, though they put more weight on business expectations.

The ANZ-Roy Morgan Consumer Confidence Index eased 2 points in March, remaining very subdued.

Turning to the detail:

- Perceptions of current personal financial situations lifted 4 points to -26%.
- A net 1% expect to be better off this time next year, down 6.
- A net 32% think it's a bad time to buy a major household item, up 3.
- Perceptions regarding the economic outlook in 12 months' time fell 5 points to -46%. Perhaps reflecting global financial headlines, the 5-yearahead measure fell from -3% to -10%.
- House price inflation expectations lifted from 0% to 0.6%. They are now strongest in Auckland (though only 1.1%, it does appear to mark a trough) and weakest in Wellington (-0.5%).
- One-year-ahead CPI inflation expectations rose from 5.2% to 5.4%, the highest since June.

Consumers remain very wary, understandably. Interest rates have risen rapidly (though it's been a while since a generalised round of increases), the cost of living is reducing their purchasing power, and now there are alarming headlines about banks, albeit faraway ones. And house prices are still falling and the old KiwiSaver balance is probably looking a little battered too. But it's not all bad. Wage growth on average is keeping up with inflation, and here and now, job security for most is still very good. We've had a month of much more settled weather to boot.

ANZ card spending is holding up pretty well, though of course people are getting less for their money as prices continue to rise. Households continue to report that they don't consider it to be a particularly good time to buy a major household item. The solid wage growth and excellent job security resulting from the very strong labour market has seen real spending hold up, but our forecasts are for markedly weaker spending this year as higher interest rates bite and the labour market develops some cracks.

Labour market developments will be a key driver of the outlook for household spending. The cost of living, particularly for those with significant debt, is definitely making a dent, and it's not clear those pressures are going to ease anytime soon, with food inflation well into double digits and more people rolling over onto higher mortgage rates. But there is a disconnect between the RBNZ's forecast of rapidly rising unemployment, and the perception on the street.

The RBNZ will not be pleased to see consumer inflation expectations rise again. Indeed, they look to have turned firmly up again. Consumers were the first to spot inflation coming in 2021, beating us pundits. And in a very tight labour market, consumer inflation expectations are likely to matter more than otherwise, as wage demands are more likely to be met.
