The year in brief

It was a good 12 months for financial markets, with many share markets rising to record highs. Bonds also performed well as interest rates finally began to fall.

Central banks cut interest rates as inflation falls

After two challenging years in which soaring prices led to a cost-of-living crisis in many developed countries, inflation rates steadily declined over the period in review.

This allowed many central banks to start cutting interest rates, taking pressure off households that had been dealing with elevated borrowing costs.

New Zealand economy enters a recession

The New Zealand economy was one of the weakest performing, with gross domestic product (GDP) falling in the second quarter of 2024, raising concerns the economy is in a recession.

Households faced increasing pressure as the cost of everyday items rose, and homeowners faced further strain as many rolled off low-interest-rate mortgages to significantly higher rates.

Reduced discretionary income meant consumer spending declined, while businesses felt the heat of lower sales, forcing many to close or lay off staff. During the September quarter, unemployment rose to 4.8%, its highest level in over three years.

US economy remains resilient

While many economies continued to show signs of slowing, the US economy was resilient over the past 12 months. Consumer spending – a significant portion of America's GDP – held up well, while the housing market also remained strong.

And despite signs the labour market was starting to soften, the economy still added at least 100,000 jobs in each of the 12 months to 30 September 2024.

Share and bond markets both performed well

As interest rates began to fall and companies benefited from lower borrowing costs, share markets did well across the board.

The technology sector remained one of the best performing, as companies continued to invest heavily in artificial intelligence (AI). Meanwhile, the real estate sector had relatively good performance after a challenging previous 12 months. At a country level, US markets outperformed most of their global peers, while the New Zealand share market underperformed but still delivered a positive return.

Also recovering from the previous two years, bond markets performed well as central banks cut interest rates – and signalled more cuts were likely.

The strong showing of both shares and bonds saw all our funds deliver strong returns over the year.
