TWO HANDED

- The RBNZ maintained the OCR at 1.75% as expected, with the tone neutral and reasonably cautious – in fact we'd say as cautious as it could possibly be, given the growth backdrop. A previous soft easing bias was removed, but the message is that the OCR is not going anywhere in a hurry. That is entirely appropriate in our view.
- In many ways the statement was very two-handed. Domestic economic strength, a higher inflation starting point and better global prospects are acknowledged, but that is balanced against NZD strength, ongoing global risks, caution over the outlook for dairy and a lower inflation forecast.
- While the lack of a confirmed explicit tightening bias will disappoint hawks, and should be bullish for short-end rates, we doubt the market will fully embrace the RBNZ's neutral tone, and expect dips to be fairly shallow. Given rising global rates, the curve should steepen.

KEY POINTS

- The OCR was maintained at 1.75% as expected – there was never a realistic chance of any other outcome. But the statement was neutral. For all intents and purposes the rate profile is flat (a hike is implied by late 2019 – some way away). Positive developments are caveated by cautious language.
- Throughout the statement, it appears the RBNZ is at pains to emphasise both positive and negative risks. The global outlook has "improved", but "major challenges" remain. Inflation is expected to rise, but only "gradually". Dairy prices have "recovered" but "uncertainty remains". "Recent moderation in house price inflation is welcome" but may not be sustained." It's a constant case of 'on the one hand... but then on the other'.
- The neutrality of the Statement is emphasised by the inclusion of two scenarios: an upside one based on higher export prices (+50bps for the OCR) and a lower one based on weaker consumption growth (-50bps). One up, one down; a signal of how the RBNZ sees the risk profile.
- Importantly, the RBNZ reemphasised its flexible approach. It argued that further easing would risk generating unnecessary volatility (as they noted in November), but also – significantly, given market pricing – that premature tightening could "forestall the anticipated gradual increase in inflation". The latter is a notable addition, probably partly aimed at the NZD. The Bank is in no hurry to do anything, and shouldn't be either.
- Overall, we agree with the spirit of the Statement (neutrality for the OCR, downside global risks, strong NZD and reasonable growth). The only surprise was the demure track for headline inflation (weaker than projected in November), which is clearly on the back of NZD strength. Its tradable inflation forecasts were cut and headline inflation is now not projected to hit 2% until mid-2019! That certainly looks a long way off given what we see across the domestic economy, though it is obviously a hat-tip to the important inflation-suppressing impact that the strong NZD is having. It is a clear reminder that the NZD is still a highly important input into the RBNZ's monetary policy deliberations.

| The Reserve Bank today left the Official Cash Rate (OCR) unchanged at 1.75 percent. | The Reserve Bank today reduced the Official Cash Rate (OCR) by 25 basis points to 1.75 percent. |
| The recovery in commodity prices and more positive business and consumer sentiment in advanced economies have improved the global outlook. However, major challenges remain with on-going surplus capacity in the global economy and rising geo-political uncertainty. Global headline inflation has increased, partly due to rising commodity prices. Global long-term interest rates have increased. Monetary policy is expected to remain stimulatory, but less so going forward, particularly in the US. | Significant surplus capacity exists across the global economy despite improved economic indicators in some countries. Global inflation remains weak even though commodity prices have come off their lows. Political uncertainty remains heightened and market volatility is elevated. |
| New Zealand's financial conditions have firmed with long-term interest rates rising and continued upward pressure on the New Zealand dollar exchange rate. The exchange rate remains higher than is sustainable for balanced growth and, together with low global inflation, continues to generate negative inflation in the tradables sector. A decline in the exchange rate is needed. | Weak global conditions and low interest rates relative to New Zealand are keeping upward pressure on the New Zealand dollar exchange rate. The exchange rate remains higher than is sustainable for balanced economic growth and, together with low global inflation, continues to generate negative inflation in the tradables sector. A decline in the exchange rate is needed. |
| Economic growth in New Zealand has increased as expected and is steadily drawing on spare resources. The outlook remains positive, supported by ongoing accommodative monetary policy, strong population growth, increased household spending and rising construction activity. Dairy prices have recovered in recent months but uncertainty remains around future outcomes. | Domestic growth is being supported by strong population growth, construction activity, tourism, and accommodative monetary policy. Recent dairy auctions have been positive, but uncertainty remains around future outcomes. High net immigration is supporting growth in labour supply and limiting wage pressure. |
| Recent moderation in house price inflation is welcome, and in part reflects loan-to-value ratio restrictions and higher mortgage rates. It is uncertain whether this moderation will be sustained given the continued imbalance between supply and demand. | House price inflation remains excessive and is posing concerns for financial stability. Although house price inflation has moderated in Auckland, it is uncertain whether this will be sustained given the continuing imbalance between supply and demand. |
| Headline inflation has returned to the target band as past declines in oil prices dropped out of the annual calculation. Inflation is expected to return to the midpoint of the target band gradually, reflecting the strength of the domestic economy and despite persistent negative tradables inflation. Longer-term inflation expectations remain well-anchored at around 2 percent. | Headline inflation continues to be held below the target range by ongoing negative tradables inflation. Annual CPI inflation was weak in the September quarter, in part due to lower fuel prices and cuts in ACC levies. Annual inflation is expected to rise from the December quarter, reflecting the policy stimulus to date, the strength of the domestic economy, and reduced drag from tradables inflation. |
| Monetary policy will remain accommodative for a considerable period. Numerous uncertainties remain, particularly in respect of the international outlook, and policy may need to adjust accordingly. | Monetary policy will continue to be accommodative. Our current projections and assumptions indicate that policy settings, including today's easing, will see growth strong enough to have inflation settle near the middle of the target range. Numerous uncertainties remain, particularly in respect of the international outlook, and policy may need to adjust accordingly. |
