A COSMETIC (NOT STRUCTURAL) CRACK

KEY POINTS

- Next week's Half-year Economic and Fiscal Update will again portray a rosy fiscal picture of rising surpluses and declining debt.
- Since the May Budget, the fiscal numbers have been tracking ahead of forecasts, which is consistent with the economy itself. Stronger nominal growth (related to both stronger real activity and the terms of trade), has boosted tax revenue and saw the OBEGAL print over $1bn ahead of forecast for FY2016. We expect this stronger revenue theme will persist throughout the projection, with Treasury likely to push through further growth and terms of trade forecast upgrades.
- Earthquake costs will be a feature of the next couple of years. At this stage any estimates are subject to a great deal of uncertainty (and we suspect the Treasury will emphasise that), but the Prime Minister has hinted that the numbers will assume a fiscal cost in the vicinity of $2-3bn. That will make a dent, but can largely be seen as a one-off.
- In terms of the numbers themselves, a return to OBEGAL deficit (albeit small) looks possible for 2016/17. Even with the stronger starting point, accounting standards will see the majority of earthquake costs likely incorporated in the 2016/17 fiscal year. We have pencilled in a deficit of 0.2% of GDP (vis-à-vis the Budget forecast of a 0.3% surplus). The impact on the residual cash and net debt positions will likely be spread over the next couple of years, providing a better indication of the actual economic cost profile. Forecast net debt will be modestly higher, but we suspect it will still peak below 26% of GDP. By the end of the projection (2021), a strong positive trend overall should be evident, with OBEGAL surpluses approaching $10bn (3% of GDP) and net debt falling below 20% of GDP – leaving the Government's fiscal targets on track.
- Higher near-term cash requirements will likely see a modest lift in bond issuance. Much will hinge on assumed earthquake costs, when these costs occur, and to what degree this is offset by a likely stronger underlying fiscal picture. We have pencilled in a lift in issuance of $1bn per year (to $8bn) over FY17 and FY18. That's a small tweak.
- A rosy set of fiscal numbers gives the Government plenty of options heading into election year and the 2017 Budget. Tax cuts are being mooted along with additional support for families. Budget allocations (provision for new initiatives) incorporated into forecasts in the 2016 Budget were $1.5 billion for the 2017, 2018 and 2019 Budgets. So there is some money in the tin.
- But the kitty is not that full. Health and education chew up a fair bit of the Budget allocation each year and strong population growth requires lifts in baselines. Core government services still need funding and you won't get much of a tax cut for less than a billion spent. We are inclined to think earthquake-related costs will be far more substantial than assumed. The repair bill for SH1 alone (or a new one) will be enormous. And the accounts are only barely in surplus, and projected surpluses are nothing more than that: a projection. Hockey-stick style forecast uplifts in the surplus tend to evaporate in reality. So there are going to be some trade-offs, and any discretionary spend-up or tax-cut package will need to be spread over a couple of years.

- That said, the fiscal projections still give the Government choices. It has the option of lifting infrastructure investment, spending more in key areas, shifting taxes or building up more of a fiscal war-chest in case of that rainy (or should we say shaky) day. You have such optionality when the books are in good shape, which they are. Deciding how to spend the money is a nice problem to have.
